Houda Bakkali: Digital Art, Digital Culture

24 May Free

An exhibition that aims to demonstrate the power of digital art to break spatial, temporal and generational borders, “creating synergies between different audiences and making art not only timeless, but also universal, close and understandable”. It features work by Bakkali alongside educational information about digital art, creative process and the uses of art and new technologies. Says the artist: “Digital art is not a trend, it is the present and the future. My art represents the need to tell stories through captivating and surprising environments, in which the viewer can immerse themselves, as is the case with augmented reality. It’s a way to experience a variety of sensations and emotions with my artwork. It also allows me to expand the story and give it life or several lives, as many as I want. In addition, it’s a way to create more fun and unique environments, involving the viewer in the artwork and making it grow over time with new stories, settings and characters.

To 31 July.
